Open Evening

Want to know more about training in Group Analysis in London?

The London IGA Open Day introduces the genesis and development of group analytic ideas and training opportunities at the IGA in London and offers an opportunity to find out more about the various training courses.

The London Courses Director and the London Course convenors will present the range of courses on offer and will be available to answer your questions about the Institute and our trainings in London. Current student reps will also contribute to presentations and will be available to answer questions about their experience of the courses.

We are also keen to share with you how we have embraced and integrated online approaches into the teaching and supervision of all courses and adapted the curriculum to included theoretical understanding of online engagements in groups.

IGA courses are available across the country and are staffed by expert clinicians, teachers, and supervisors. We will speak about the range of opportunities, although the focus for this afternoon will be London. Our training courses are multi-tiered, flexible, and accessible. For those who are not ready for a year commitment or who would like to have a taster opportunity, The Introductory Weekend would provide an initial glimpse into Group Analysis and what groups can offer. The one-year Foundation Course constitutes the first stage of the training. Satisfactory completion of a Foundation Course is a requirement for progression to the one-year Diploma in Group Work Practice that can lead to Groupwork Practitioner Status and Associate Membership of the IGA.

Group Analytic training will equip students to understand and to participate more fully in a range of group settings including work, families, social learning, therapeutic and a range of online settings.

If you would like to know more about group analysis and group therapy, or how to continue your learning journey, we look forward to meeting you online on Thursday 3rd September, 2020.
